

The Glory of Human Potential

By Donna D'Ingillo

Hidden within the depths of human nature is a treasure trove waiting to be activated by human choice. As children of a magnificent Creator, we are given the capacity and ability to become like our Creator over a long evolutionary journey. Attributes of our loving Creator, such as goodness, patience, kindness, fairness, justice, equality, forgiveness, and nature, are ours to cultivate if we choose. The divine mandate to “become perfect as I am perfect” entices and stimulates our human natures to expand beyond our own sense of self. What we can become is nothing more than attaining the glory of God as humans, which was magnificently demonstrated by the greatest truth-revealer and way-shower of all time—Jesus.

We have been endowed with the gift of selfhood by our Creator—intimately connected to Deity but having our own individuality that we cultivate over our ascension careers to self-perfect. We may consider that our entire selfhood exists within the immensity of the source of the divine nature; yet we maintain our own ability to choose whether or not to cooperate with what our selfhood holds for our creative cultivation. Consider that what we have not yet become in mind and body exists in a state of potential—qualities of the divine waiting to come to life through our thoughts, feelings, and actions. We have the ability to become Godlike in our own unique way, but how do we activate what lies within us, yet to be created?

Here lies the conundrum of self-actualization: we are not designed or destined to become Godlike all on our own. The presence of the “I AM” of our Creator is replicated in the “I am” of our innate selfhood. The human nature is crafted upon a light matrix of our Source’s spirit substance to navigate the terrestrial plane, but we are more than our humanity. The inner “I am” presence functions to hold an inner place of who we are becoming in the highest sense of self, and to adjust to our conscious awareness (thoughts and feelings) to what is truly Godlike—all that is good, beautiful, and true. We are given insights and intuitions to discern what our inner divinity is conveying. We can act upon the information if we choose. When we follow and cooperate with the divine inner leading, we grow our potential—and that turns into another entity—our souls—the body of light quietly growing within our human design.

Our human potential then holds the secret of our own magnificence contained within our higher selves. We can become all that our Creator is while we are here in human form. Do you wish to embody divine peace, love, patience, equality, fairness, prudent discernment, and other such lovely attributes? For these are the actual, divinely inspired characteristics that will heal you and transform our world. Our human glory is waiting to come to life to build the heavenly culture so many yearn to experience.

However, this undertaking is not something our current culture values or promotes. It must be our own priority and choice to respond to the inner prompting to self-perfect, irrespective of the cultural value system. The reward of self-perfection does not come with immediate gratification. We must strive daily with intention and willingness as a central inner focus to give our divine guidance permission to break through the inertia of cultural conditioning. Yet, when the insights are clear, then the willingness to become more active. The personal decision to actualize the deep inner divine nature begins the process of be-coming: you are coming into the “BE-ingness” of your own “I am,” beautiful to behold by others, and a radiant soul adding more light into the fabric of planetary consciousness.

Over the course of January, I will be building on the theme of human potential as the way forward to personal and planetary transformation. These links augment this concept for your continued edification.
